

A PRISTINE VENUE IN THE COUNTRY

BELL GATE FARM has been around a long time. Built in 1780, its pastoral environs are ideal for just about any kind of celebration or gathering you can imagine. Stephanie Stevens, whose family purchased the farm in 1963, has just completed a revitalization of the estate that would make her parents proud.

When they were first married, Stephanie's father was a successful lawyer with a substantial debt load, but her mother was a frugal nurse who grew up in the Pennsylvania coal region. Together they transformed Bell Gate Farm into a tranquil retreat for family, friends, and associates.

Sadly, Stephanie's parents both passed away recently. "I was very close to my parents," she says, "and I felt untethered when I lost them." But Stephanie had an epiphany during her mother's funeral that would honor both their lives and her relationship with them—convert the farmhouse, barn, and guesthouse into a soup-to-nuts events venue to meet every budget.

In addition to weddings, parties, and corporate meetings, Stephanie wants Bell Gate Farm to be a true community, including outdoor movie nights, a Santa's Village complete with sleigh rides, and eventually even a General Store. It would be a combination of the Saucon Valley Promenade and Peddler's Village, yet more intimate.

"Bell Gate Farm is a labor of love and legacy," Stephanie says, "and at the end of the day that's what's most important."
